About the Symposium

There is an on-going debate as to whether: litigation (resolution of disputes through the courts) or arbitration (non-court alternative method of resolving disputes) is the more effective mechanism for the settlement of Islamic finance disputes. Studies have shown that Islamic financial institutions tend to favour litigation over arbitration for various reasons. However, in recent years, there has been a strong push, for better or worse, towards the use of arbitration in Islamic finance. It is claimed that arbitration, which has a strong basis in Islamic jurisprudence, has an advantage over litigation as it promotes settlement of disputes speedily and discreetly. Some proponents of arbitrations have suggested that arbitration clauses should be made mandatory in Islamic finance agreements.

Realising the importance of these issues, the Ahmad Ibrahim Kulliyah of Laws (AIKOL) together with the School of Business, Monash University Malaysia, will jointly organise a one-day Symposium to enable the arguments to be presented and debated on a preferred dispute settlement mechanism in Islamic finance. The Symposium will be led by members of the judiciary, legal practitioners and academics who will be carefully selected by reason of their particular expertise and interest in the area. It is hoped that, by the end of the Symposium, participants would be able to conclude which of the two dispute resolution mechanism is preferred for settling Islamic finance disputes.

Benefits of Attending

- Increase awareness of dispute resolution mechanisms and infrastructure available for effective resolution of Islamic finance disputes
- Enable proponents and opponents of litigation and arbitration in Islamic finance to present their arguments in an appropriate forum
- Enable the delegates drawn from among the judiciary, industry, and academia to learn from the presented views and, at the same time, to engage with the presenters and query workability of the viewpoints presented
- Propose to the regulators reform of the existing laws and policies
